word on to his officers in Central Asia to hurry matters there and take up all the positions of advantage. Burning with military ardour, and eager to display their valor, these redoubtable braves must then have improved on their instructions, and committed some acts of war. Or it is just possible that the Chinese Government are desirous of making Kuldja the seat of war, in order that Russia's attention should be diverted from Peking. Of course, things may not have gone so far wrong but that some explanations and the sacrifice of two or three heads would restore affairs to their former footing, but it is obvious that making allowance a very grave aspect, even making allowance for great exaggeration in Russian telegrams.

With regard to the first portion of the telegram published to-day it is to be regretted that a manifestly important statement should have been transmitted in so vague a manner. In the first place it is not even hinted between what countries war is expected to be declared, and we are only led to the conclusion that it is between Russia and China, because that quarrel seems most likely to lead to an immediate rupture. Turkey is making preparations to resist the decisions of the Conference, and affairs have lately been moving so fast in Eastern Europe that the telegram might possibly apply to the Sick Man, but we do not think so. Still Russia need not have left quite so much to be taken for granted. Then again the declaration, attributed to Mr. Gladstone, "that the British Government would avail itself of Russia's offer to enter into communication respecting British interests" is very unsatisfactory, both because it is difficult of explanation, and because it may mean much that is disagreeable. The British Government intend, it is to be granted, to preserve a strict neutrality in the event of Russia and China going to war, but we trust that they will not stoop so low as to make non-interference by Russia with British trade in China ports the price of that neutrality. Neutrality should certainly be maintained by England, but she should demand of Russia as a right, that certain ports—more especially Shanghai—should not be blockaded, since thereby British commercial interests would be seriously affected. It was by England and France that the ports of China were opened to trade, and all the other Treaty Powers have profited by the blood and treasure those two nations so freely lavished to effect that purpose. They have clearly a claim upon those who have since come in, reaping where they have not sown, and it would be simple justice on the part of Russia or any other Power engaged in a dispute with China to respect to the utmost the rights of those who first broke down the barriers of exclusiveness erected by the Government of Peking. The treaty ports ought not to be blockaded, and Russia should simply be told that any attempt to stop trade by that means would be construed as an unfriendly act calculated to provoke a breach of neutrality.

The British ship Bellona arrived at Shanghai from Melbourne, on the 8th inst., after a lengthy voyage of 250 days.

Commodore Smith is expected to return to Hongkong in the O. & O. steamer Oceanic, due here on Friday, from Yokohama.

A parade and inspection of the Volunteer and Government Fire Brigades will take place on the 15th inst. at Central Fire Brigade Station.

The Russian corvette Nezhdanitsa arrived at Nagasaki on the 2nd inst., without touching either at Singapore or Hongkong en route. We note that the Princo Porgy, now at Singapore, is also destined for Japan, and it is probable she will, like the Nezhdanitsa, pass this port without touching.
